Welcome

There is a little cave in the mountains above the Drackensburg resort in the center of South Africa. In that cave there are paintings of wildlife and humans thought to be some 800 years old. You can imagine the privilege it is to see such a piece of work. The cave is not guarded, open to anyone who wants to take the hike. Worth it. But the tragedy is that some have taken that hike and felt the need to add their own touch to what should be left untouched. It makes no sense to scratch or mark over these works of history. But some have done it. Certainly when they did it, they weren't thinking it made it looked better. It can remind us of the gift of salvation. Something worth experiencing, but many of us want to add our own contribution to the gift. Some of us think it may even make it better. But it doesn't ever. It only ends up looking like scratch marks on something irreplaceable. Today in worship, God will be reminding us that there is nothing to add... we can only accept. Welcome to Campion.
